Washington, January 21.—In the house today, Bacon of New York, chairman of the committee on public buildings reported a resolution and succeeded in calling up the allegation that certain individuals and corporations engaged in manufacturing or mining, or dealing in some necessaries of life, have combined for the purpose of controlling or curtailing the production or supply of the same, thereby increasing their prices to the people, affecting injuriously commerce between the states and impairing the revenues of the government and directing the committee on manufactures to examine into the matter and extent of such combinations and further to report to the house what, if any, legislation is necessary to the end that the evil complained of may be remedied.

Mr. Hoge, of West Virginia, moved to lay the resolution on the table. Lost.

Mr. Cox, Democrat, of North Carolina, moved to lay the amendment on the table. Lost.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the resolution, and it was agreed to.

The brilliant letter on the French chamber of deputies by a member of that body who does not wish to have his name known.

We have to announce that arrangements have been made in our European correspondence for two letters on "Home Rule in Ireland and Elsewhere," by Edward A. Freeman. Mr. Freeman, since the death of Mr Green, is regarded as the first authority in English history, and his letters, therefore, will have great value.

The London Spectator has a very interesting article on the British vote in America. By the British vote is meant the voters of English, Scotch, Welsh and Canadian birth. It claims, therefore, that this vote has not been fully cast. While many of this class have come to this country for the purpose of settling, yet, it is claimed, a comparatively small number have taken out naturalization papers. According to the census of 1890 there were four hundred thousand naturalized, who to all intents and purposes were American citizens. An organ for this class is now published called the British American, which is urging all British born settlers in this country to become American citizens. One object in view is to counteract the influence of the Irish vote. This Irish vote is a very important factor in American politics, but as it is usually cast so solidly one way, it will undoubtedly be an effort made by the British American organ to induce many of them to vote with the Republican party so that they will have some way as a counterbalance to the Irish vote without having any definite facts on this subject, we can hardly accept the statement that so many of the British-Americans are not naturalized. The fact is that they have had so little interest in politics as a body, as compared to the Irish, is not because there were not enough voters, but because there were so many obstacles existing to their registering and voting in any one direction. The Irish all over the country have their political societies and are clannish, but the Scotch, the Welsh, the English and the Canadians all have their own independent societies and do not act together. Even these separate nationalities do not make themselves felt in politics as the Irish Catholic societies do, because usually the members are too well educated to be led by the nose by any leader. But their vote is divided up between the different parties, and their influence is felt in politics any more than any distinctive third party that might be called American. We confess that we do not look with any great satisfaction on any effort to consolidate this vote. It is claimed the purpose is to make them Americans, but we fear it will result in increasing a disagreeable element in our politics. The Irish by voting together have undoubtedly obtained more or less help from politicians in the agitation of home rule. If British organizations were organized to counteract that, it would simply make it so much the worse, though they have the same right as the Irish to fight their home battles in this country. It is natural time that our emigrants who have come to this country with us should become Americans in fact and not claim to bring the politics of their native land into our municipal elections.

PRACTICAL WIVES.

Mary J. Holmes Strongly Urges Home Training for Girls.

"I never made a loaf of bread in my life, and I hope I never shall. I hate housework."

"Yes, but keep a hired girl, then, papa."

"Oh no, papa says he can't afford it; mamma does the work and dishes from morning till night. I should think she'd die." And the young girl who hated housework emphasized the last words with a slight toss of the head which set the silver bangles on her wrist to jingling.

The place was a street car in the East Side; the speaker a girl of [illegible] years, in plain shoddy with a scarlet bird perched saucily upon it, and in her hand the cotton bag of sugar, for she had just come from a market where fresh beans were booked that night to be paid for by a man who could not afford to have a servant and whose wife was the happiest of drudges. And at the next crossing the dresser entered the car, carrying a full basket, in which were several parcels which she was taking home herself, as she could not well to have them sent. She wore an old-fashioned bonnet and gown and her face was pale and her eyes tired, but they lighted up with the mother love and pride as they fell upon the daughter who with only a nod of recognition, continued her talk with her companion. A few blocks further on they alighted, the girl in the latter made still getting off first and hurrying up the side street, closely followed by the mother, who pulled her shawl over the basket as if to hide it from sight.

As I looked after them I thought I knew just the kind of home education the daughter was receiving, and that it was a sample of the manner in which many of our girls are trained, not only in families of wealth, where there may be some excuse for it, but also in the households where every extra dollar is a consideration. Were we all Vanderbilts and likely to stay so it would not matter so much, although even then it were far better to know how a thing should be done, for there can be no good employe for any length of time unless there is first a competent employer. If the mistress is ignorant of everything pertaining to the kitchen, her servants will naturally be careless and neglectful, wasting more than the worth of their wages, if indeed, they are not sometimes guilty of graver faults than these.

And how much more serious is the matter when there are no servants and the young wife enters upon her duties as housekeeper wholly ignorant of so simple a matter as the making of good bread, and with no idea of economy or thrift. And this is the outgrowth of the system which makes drudges of the boys and idlers of the girls. Sweet amiable girls, many of them are, with faces which attract and win the heart of a good man, but who are wholly deficient in the domestic qualities which will make the man's happiness and keep his love after it is won. For this the mother is as much to blame as the daughter, who is thought too dainty and too fine for a cook or dish-washer, which anything like ironing or sweeping is out of the question as the one would callous and the other broaden the hands of which she is so proud. But the same girl will sit for hours at the piano, playing chords and octaves which in time enlarge the joints and broaden the hands quite as much as do the flatiron or broom. I have known families whose income was not more than $400 or $500 a year, but whose daughters have piano-maid for Heaven only knows how and practiced upon hour after hour, while the mother in the kitchen is wearing her life away and the father in the field is growing old and discouraged with the burdens he has to bear.

Now, if the girl has a decided talent for music and intends to make it her means of livelihood it should be encouraged at the cost of many a household drudge. But the chances are that she has no talent for it, and only take it up because other girls do the same or with a mistaken idea that it will be a stepping stone to some social height she can't reach without it, forgetting that it is what we are and not what we seem who is judged upon the world and that what we are will sooner or later show itself, no matter how we disguise it. The boy who thought to pass for a sheep was detected and given to the dogs, and the girl who has nothing to recommend her but a superficial knowledge of many things will soon be found out and find herself [illegible] with a husband who [illegible] with music, so with [illegible] for which she has sacrificed more substantial [illegible] will be found out, and she will be left to [illegible] with a husband who [illegible] a taste for substantial food, and [illegible] that could [illegible] or [illegible] they would [illegible] [illegible] plaster [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Last Thursday evening Mr. H. C. McCreery was presented with a handsome watch charm by the members of Pike's Peak lodge, on the occasion of his retirement from the chairmanship of the board of trustees of that society. The presentation was made at Odd Fellows hall, at the close of the evening's business, and is a worthy tribute to so faithful an officer. The charm was manufactured under the direction of Mr. Frank Eott and consists of a handsome smoky topaz, beautifully [illegible] with gold. On one side it shows the emblems of the three branches of the order, worked with great care and skill, and on the other side are Mr. McCreery's initials in large, handsome raised letters.

Yesterday morning considerable excitement was created on Tejon street by the actions of a mule attached with an attack of what Dr. Hewitt pronounced the megrims or mad staggers. The mule was being led by a boy mounted on another animal when the attack seized him in front of Roby's feed store. The mule commenced to plunge and kick in a vicious manner, and one of the bystanders thinking that the boy might be in danger from the animal rushed up and cut the rope with which the boy was leading him. The mule as soon as he was set free ran blindly across the street and directly into the south glass front window of Perkins' Bros. crockery establishment. A crash of glass and fine crockery which was displayed in the window was the result. A large crowd collected at the store, and the mule was caught and taken off the sidewalk. But it was almost impossible to control him, and he soon broke away and charged back across the street into the south window of Dr. Tucker's office. The iron railing which surrounds a small balcony in front of the building and the window was completely shattered. The mule was again captured and securely held, and no further damage resulted. Perkins Bros. place their loss at $200, and the total damage from the animal's escapade will amount to nearly $250.
